POLISH PRESS URGES CONTROL OF DANZIG BY A PROTECTORATE

Indicates Strong Resistance by Warsaw To Hitler's Demands

PROPOSALS INSPIRED

Foreign Minister Beck Expected To Deliver Important Statement

WARSAW, May 2—(INS)—Suggestions for a Polish protectorate over the free city of Danzig today indicated strong resistance by the Warsaw government to Chancellor Hitler's demands for restoration of Danzig to the Reich and a wide German road across the Polish Corridor.

The officially inspired proposals, published by Polish newspapers, foreshadowed the possibility that the Polish Government may advance stern

Poland Buttresses Defense

By Lester Kirkien

Warsaw, May 2—Determined to resist German demands for restoration of Danzig to the Reich and for a broad right of way across the Polish Corridor, the Cabinet moved swiftly today to buttress Poland's defenses.

The Cabinet, at a special meeting, decided to propose that Parliament confer upon President Ignacy Moscicki extraordinary powers governing national defense preparations, economic might and financial regulations. Under the proposal, the President would be empowered to issue decrees in the fields of defense, economics and finance, excepting on questions affecting the parity of Poland's currency.

The President's power would remain effective until the convention of the Parliament next Autumn, by which time Warsaw authorities hope the present Polish-German dispute will have been settled.

Suggestions for a Polish protectorate over the Free City of Danzig left little doubt in the minds of observers that the government is planning strong resistance to Chancellor Hitler's demand for Danzig and a German route across the Corridor.

Britain Presses Poland For Firm Stand

London, May 2—The British Government brought pressure on Poland today to stand firm in defiance of Chancellor Adolf Hitler's demand for restoration of Danzig to the Reich and for a German highway across the Polish Corridor, linking Pomerania with East Prussia.

Authoritative British and Polish quarters said Great Britain was urging the Warsaw government to maintain the "stiffest possible attitude," particularly regarding Hitler's demand in the Corridor.

These circles reiterated that Poland is determined to maintain her right in the Corridor and thus resist what the Polish government regards as a German move to cut Poland off from the Baltic Sea.

(Background note: Polish suspicion regarding the motive behind Hitler's demand for a German right of way across the Corridor is said to persist despite the fact that the Fuehrer in his Reichstag speech on Friday specifically admitted that he recognized Poland's need for an outlet to the sea.)

Mason Funeral Service To Be Held On Thursday

DOYLESTOWN, May 2—Funeral service for W. Laurence Mason, 51, prominent insurance agent, who died suddenly Sunday midnight, will be private on Thursday with interment in the Doylestown Cemetery. There will be a viewing at his late residence, Golf View Road, Wednesday night from seven to nine.

Mr. Mason, who was one of a family of four generations of special agents connected with the Provident Mutual Life Insurance Company of Philadelphia, was well known throughout Bucks county. He had been in ill health two years but a heart attack Sunday evening resulted in death several hours later.

The deceased was a past president of the Rotary Club of Doylestown and for a number of years was an officer of the Doylestown Country Club. He is survived by his wife, Belle, a daughter and one son.

DOYLESTOWN SPEAKERS FAVOR ONE-WAY TRAFFIC

Parking and Traffic Problem Needs Solution Soon, Is Claim

MANY IN DISCUSSION

DOYLESTOWN, May 2—"Immediately imperative" are words which were used at the meeting of Doylestown Forum to express the fact that something must be done at once about parking and traffic conditions, in this borough, especially on State street.

"What action should be taken about general traffic and parking conditions in and through Doylestown?" was the question under discussion.

Importance of such regulations to all residents of the borough was stressed by J. Carroll Molloy, the main speaker. He told of the need of such because of the amount of trade done here, many hesitating to shop in town because of the risk of driving in the two-way traffic of State street.

"Merchants seem to think," said Mr. Molloy, "that through traffic stops at their doors, whereas there is actually a very small percentage of any shopping done by those driving through the town. Doylestown's two largest hotels, located on State street are so widely and favorably known that they would be sought out regardless of how traffic might be directed on that street."

Mr. Molloy stated that he considered parking space of the utmost importance to the business interests of the town and that one-way traffic would permit of parking on both sides of the street.

"The only other solutions possible," added Mr. Molloy, "are to widen State street or provide parking lots in the central part of the town. However, neither of these solutions is practicable, no space being available for parking lots and the very heavy expense involved in attempting to widen the street sufficiently to do good."

Dr. John J. Sweeney, Burgess, said he believed a great deal of the traffic trouble was due more to the careless handling of cars by driving than to anything else. "We have ordinances that if obeyed would do away with many of our traffic headaches," he said, "but there is scarcely a business or professional man in town who has not been guilty of some infraction of the traffic laws."

The Burgess urged greater co-operation on the part of the citizens to make the present ordinances either effective or rescind them and provide others.

Among other speakers on the subject were Thomas Ross, Webster Grim, Col. Ira F. Fravel of Wrightstown, Justin H. Ely, Frederic B. Jaekel and Frank Kolbe.

Problems Face State I. U. C.

Harrisburg, May 2—The Pennsylvania Industrial Union Council, state body of CIO organizations, opened its second annual convention today, its meetings overshadowed by contractual difficulties in the coal field.

Facing it also, as it celebrated its first anniversary, were the efforts of the Progressive Miners of America, an A. F. of L. affiliate to undermine its strongest group, the United Mine Workers union, through a membership drive among coal miners.

Despite this, the P. I. U. C. was again expected to go on record as favoring peace between the CIO and A. F. of L. and also expected to discuss the current peace negotiations now under way in New York.

Methodists Consider Boundaries

Kansas City, May 2—Fixing of boundaries of the numerous conferences of the United Methodist Church was proving a problem for the Jurisdictional Committee today.

As soon as the Committee has worked out division lines, a report will be made to the general conference.

The south-central Jurisdictional Committee was able to make only slight progress on fixing conference territories in its section last night, and finally turned the work over to a smaller sub-committee, which continued working today.

The sub-committee decided that Missouri would have three conferences, to be known as the Missouri, St. Louis and southwest Missouri conferences.

Here and There in Bucks County Towns

About fifty persons met in the auditorium of the local school on Tuesday evening for the second meeting of the Upper Southampton Parent-Teacher Association. Harry Harding, president, was in the chair. Reports of the various committees were heard. It was suggested that the membership committee make an extensive drive during the Summer so that when meetings are resumed in September, there will be a large group to carry on the work. Secretary and treasurer were instructed to purchase books as needed in which to keep their records.

The matter of becoming affiliated with the county and state organizations was discussed and it was decided to table the matter until the September meeting.

It was decided to give some type of award to the members of the school orchestra, and Mrs. Henderson Cotter was appointed chairman of a committee to raise funds for this project.

Following the business session F. Eugene Klinger showed the motion pictures taken of the activities throughout the school recently. The May meeting will be held in the school building on May 23.

Upper Delaware River shad fishermen are getting a break at last, with warmer weather and ideal river conditions for fishing. The largest hauls in recent years are being reported at the various fisheries between New Hope and Easton.

Approximately 300 shad were caught on the New Jersey side at Lambertville by Bill Lewis and his crew of assistants and by the Scarborough fishery on the Pennsylvania side at New Hope. Another early haul accounted for 32 fine shad. Most of the fish average between five and eight pounds.

Buck shad sells on the river banks for 50 cents apiece while the roe shad bring $1 and there are many tanks. Some of the fisheries have standing orders from the New York markets, where the upper Delaware River shad this year is bringing a premium price over other shad.

Hotel men from Doylestown, Trenton, Stockton and other places are among the early morning buyers.

Corporal William F. Herman, of the Doylestown sub-station of the Pennsylvania Motor Police, announced that the missing persons bureau is endeavoring to locate Joseph Friesing, a former resident of Sellersville.

Friesing, who is 57 years old and 5 feet 5 inches, was employed in a pants factory, known as the Penn Pants Company, in Sellersville.

In 1917 he was employed in the Penn Pants Company in Reading. He was also employed at one time with Hart-Schaffner-Marx in Chicago, Ill., and in Baltimore, Md.

Corporal Herman explained that his

Lindbergh Urges Action At Once

By Leon W. Shloss

Langley Field, Va., May 2—Fresh from a week's flying survey of U. S. military air bases, Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh warned government officials today that "unless we get going, we won't catch up with Germany in five years," in the aviation research activity that is giving that country the mightiest air force in the world.

Lindbergh's warning was made as he accompanied 250 representatives of the aviation industry to inspect Langley Field, the only aeronautic research facilities possessed by the Federal Government. His advice was renewed after he witnessed the first demonstration of a new "wonder wing" perfected by Langley engineers, which is expected to increase the speed of fighting airplanes to 500 miles an hour.

The gravity with which Lindbergh viewed the plight of this country in aviation research was emphasized by this statement, made to a member of the party:

"(He was quoted as saying) have no plans for returning to Europe. I am having uniforms made and will be available for any service with which I may be called."

He reiterated the promise to appear before any Congressional committee that wants to hear him on the desirability of the $4,000,000 Sunnyside, California, research laboratory turned down by Congress.

"We need (Lindbergh was quoted as saying) not only the Sunnyside laboratory, but at least two or three more on the same magnitude. Today, if we don't get going, we cannot catch up in five years. Germany leads, Britain is second, Italy and France on a par among the European nations. Russia is far behind."

Livengood was to be sworn in for a four-year term at noon, eastern standard time, in the Senate chamber before members of the Legislature, Governor Arthur H. James and his cabinet, and members of the Young Republicans of Pennsylvania, of which he is a member. He was expected to be sworn in by Miss Sophia M. R. O'Hara, Secretary of the Commonwealth.

A-Maying We Will Go!

(By The Stroller)

Torresdale Manor residents had a pleasant surprise yesterday morning, for when many of the good home-makers arose they found upon their doorsteps little baskets of freshly-picked violets.

These harbingers of Spring, evidently plucked by some of the children or young folks of the community made a pleasant note of color in many homes on this May day, and the recipients are still wondering whom they should thank for the gifts.

TO IMPROVE FIVE BRICK HOUSES AND ERECT 3 APARTMENTS

Plot of Ground and Houses Opposite St. Mark's Church To Be Improved

WORK HAS STARTED

Other Dwellings Being Erected In The Sixth Ward Section

The plot of ground opposite St. Mark's Church on Radcliffe street and the five one-story and basement brick houses along with the double frame dwelling, extending from Nos. 1036 to 1106, are to be improved. The entire property has been purchased from Mrs. S. E. Lincoln by Mrs. George H. Thomas of Cornwells Heights. The ground extends from the street line to the Delaware River.

Mrs. Thomas today described briefly her plans for the improvement and stated that she plans to build three apartments in the dwelling and will remodel the five brick houses into colonial cottages.

"Every effort will be made to preserve the colonial architecture. The houses will be quaint with beamed ceilings and will be attractively decorated on the interior."

Mrs. Thomas has planned the improvement herself and in commenting on this said: "They are being planned by a woman for women and every detail will be carried out from the woman's point of view."

Work has been started and the houses, as well as the apartments, will have every modern convenience. Oil burners are to be installed and the entire project will be made just as attractive as possible.

There have been a number of single dwellings erected in Bristol this year with most of the improvement in the sixth ward.

One dwelling has been completed on Taylor street, two are being erected on Wood street, east of Taylor street, and three are being built on Roosevelt street. The cellar for a fourth is being dug. The houses are of an attractive type and add much to the appearance of the section in which they have been built. Carl Nelson is developing the Roosevelt street section. The houses on Taylor street and Wood street are privately owned.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

(Copyright, 1938, by The Baltimore Sun)

The Hitler Advantage

Washington, May 1. A FEELING exists among some strong supporters of the President's foreign policy that it will be better if he does not make a further reply to the Hitler speech. This is not because there is any lessening of belief in the basic fact that the best way to avert war is to make it clear our weight would be on the side of England and France, but because a continuation of a duel of oratory between Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Hitler will redound to the advantage of the latter.

THAT is the plain truth about the situation. To state it is not to reflect upon Mr. Roosevelt or disparage his effort—it merely is to face realities and prevent prejudice from blurring the vision—in brief, stop kidding ourselves. For example, just as it is conceded that Mr. Roosevelt's appeal to Hitler and Mussolini was designed to put them on the spot, reach the people back of them and mold world opinion against them, so, too, is it agreed that the Hitler speech was a propaganda speech designed to defend himself at home and divide democratic opinion abroad.

THIS being so, it is quite clear that the Hitler reply was more effective than the Roosevelt appeal, for very good reasons. The chief of these is that by reason of the very form of government we so greatly cherish the Hitler speech reached the American people in a way the Roosevelt speech did not reach the German people. In Germany, it is true, the Roosevelt appeal reached a certain proportion by short-wave radio, but these were a small minority.

CONFISCATORY TAXES

The Brookings Institution, at Washington, one of the most reliable and impartial research organizations in the country, has issued a report which declares that the federal tax system must be drastically revived, because existing levies are choking the flow of private funds into investment channels.

Among other things, the institute suggests abolition of the tax on intercorporate dividends, substantial reduction of surtax rates on incomes in the higher brackets, abolition of the tax on the undistributed profits of corporations, elimination of the normal income tax on corporate dividends and disregard of capital gains and losses in computing taxes on corporation incomes.

All these reforms are so manifestly necessary that it is hardly necessary to point them out. The worst feature of many of these taxes is that they reflect on active hostility to business. They were born in a spirit of class hatred and the mania to "swat the rich."

If the administration should retreat from this attitude it would be more important than any one reform, itself.

Experts in the treasury department have admitted that the income tax rates in the higher brackets have reached a point where the law of diminishing returns begins to operate. In other words, more actual revenue would be brought in if the rates were not so high. Rates which run as high as 79 per cent become practically confiscatory, especially when taken in connection with the inheritance and gift taxes.

The capital gains tax is a monstrous device. It is the essence of unfairness. At the very least, losses should be offset against gains over a reasonable period of time if business is to be allowed to accumulate anything.

Again, the whole idea behind the tax on the undistributed profits of corporations was unsound and has been unproductive. The depression has been severe enough, but it would have been much more so if many corporations had not accumulated reserves with which to cushion the shock. They spent 20 billion dollars more than they earned in the first years of the depression, just to keep the wheels turning and to give workers a chance to live.

And yet the tax on undistributed profits would make such reserves difficult if not impossible hereafter and at the same time it has brought in little revenue.

Sturdy Pat Harrison succeeded in modifying this tax considerably and its repeal would have more of a psychological value than anything else, but this would be great and as we have indicated is the one thing business requires almost as much as concrete reforms.

CAVEMAN OR HUMAN?

War is nothing but a throwback to caveman days, according to a leading scientist. It seems that men like a fight and will continue, on occasion, to pick one up despite the best efforts of the pacifists.

That is, indeed, a pessimistic conclusion reflecting little credit upon the human race.

However, there are other scientists of contrary opinion who insist that civilized man is not an essential savage and that he will, in time, launch forth on a basis of permanent peace.

IT did not reach the German people at all through the press. It was printed in the German papers in the form and shape and quantity deemed desirable by the Reich authorities, and the press comment was uniformly and unanimously hostile and contemptuous. On the other hand, in this country the Hitler reply was carried over all broadcasting systems and printed fully in every metropolitan newspaper. There, of course, were no restrictions as to either press or radio. Hitler was able to reach the ear and eye of every American, but the American President could reach the ear and eye of an extremely limited number of Germans, and even those under conditions not calculated to make converts.

BUT even more significant was the difference in editorial comment. In Germany, of course, there was nothing but the most bitter denunciation. But here there were not lacking editorial writers and columnists to assert that there was in the Hitler reply not only certain points which weakened the American position but that in his new demands—to wit, the return of Danzig to Germany and a road across the Polish Corridor connecting the two parts of Prussia—in these demands there is basic morality and justice. Nor was it surprising that certain American isolationists, finding their own arguments against the President's policy repeated by Mr. Hitler, regarded them as sound.

IN other words, the Hitler speech found a certain amount of public commendation here and supplied to the opponents of the President's policies a certain amount of ammunition. The reverse of that was true of the President's words in Germany. In the totalitarian set-up such a thing as a public concession of any justice whatever on the other side is not possible. The net result of the exchange seems to have been advantageous to Hitler rather than to us. He got his propaganda home over here; the American President did not get his home over there.

FOR these and other reasons the hope is expressed that Mr. Roosevelt will not give Mr. Hitler another opportunity of a further spread of propaganda which by reason of the freedom of our institutions we cannot check and which because of German censorship we cannot match. In connection with the Hitler speech, it was unfortunate that almost simultaneously there should have been published the fantastic story of an alleged appeal made by Mr. Roosevelt months ago. According to this, the President's idea was that he, Hitler and Mussolini each should take a battleship, meet somewhere in the Atlantic Ocean and talk things over.

IT is true the President has denied this story, but the man who wrote it, Mr. Krock, of the New York Times, would not have done so without thinking it true, and it must have some basis in fact. The reason it is regarded as unfortunate is that it is so fantastic as to make one wonder what kind of man the President really is that he could seriously entertain such an idea. It is not the sort of revelation calculated to increase confidence in his coolness and judgment. Take all these things together and it is easy to appreciate why some in entire sympathy with his basic policy hope that for a while at least he will concentrate upon putting our domestic affairs and defenses in such shape that war, if it comes, will not find us unprepared, and cease trying to engage the dictators in personal debate.

Behind the Scenes in HOLLYWOOD

By HARRISON CARROLL

Copyright, 1939

HOLLYWOOD—Paramount carried "Union Pacific" all the way to San Francisco for its sneak preview and the cards on Newcomer Robert Preston were so good that Cecil B. De Mille offered the studio $250,000 for Preston's contract. An amazing thing when you remember that, only a short time ago, this young actor was appearing at the Pasadena Community Playhouse.

But De Mille isn't so crazy. He once had Joel McCrea under personal contract for a salary that was little more than buttons in Hollywood parlance. He let McCrea go, so what happened? So he had to pay $125,000 to get Joel for "Union Pacific."

Is the Madge Evans-Tom Gallery romance drifting after all these years? And is a New York playwright one of the reasons?

The Lewis Milestone peace pact with Hal Roach was made six weeks ago, though it's just now getting into the papers. Milestone will direct "Of Mice and Men" for Roach and, believe it or not, he says he has a script that is approved both by the Hays office and by Author John Steinbeck.

The cuss-words and the bunk-house sex talk will be cleaned up but Milestone believes the story will be just as strong. There will be other changes. Lennie, the feeble-minded giant, will carry around a dead bird instead of a mouse. (It is believed this will be less repulsive to feminine audiences.)

If Milestone has his way, neither Broderick Crawford, who played Lennie in New York, nor Lon Chaney, Jr., who is doing the role here, will get the call for the picture. Milestone wants Big Boy Williams.

Here's a laugh. The Paramount publicity department was ballyhoing a search for an alley cat to be used in the mystery thriller, "The Cat and the Canary."

The front office sent in a stop order. It was afraid that people would get the idea the film was an animal picture.

The Max Factor outfit was much upset over the discovery that a local bandit had bought a false mustache and heard at its establishment. There's a new ruling now. If you want to buy anything at Factors' than might be used as a disguise, you have to supply credentials.

Quite a human interest story to be found on the "On Borrowed Time" set at M-G-M. The stand-in for young Bob Watson, Sonny Bupp and Dickie Jones are all brothers. Their name is Brown and their late father was a studio metal worker for 20 years. The family was friendly with Bob Watson's parents and Coy Watson, Sr., got the Brown youngster, their present jobs.

Not all the drama in Hollywood takes place while cameras are turning.

Playing an extra in "The Rains Came" will be Louis Schaeffer, a refugee Jewish actor who recently came to this country and to Hollywood. When Director Clarence Brown okayed him for the picture, Schaeffer made an unusual request.

He asked permission to go out before the company, just before the first scene is made, and to say a brief prayer—in thanks for his job and for the privilege of being in America.

Brown will let him do it.

Florence Rice's remark that her marriage to Robert Wilcox was sudden was an understatement. The two decided on a Wednesday afternoon and were married that night. . . . On a romantic island near Honolulu, before an altar completely covered with orchids. . . . When you see "Broadway Serenade," pay attention to the comedy scenes between William Gargan and Frank Morgan. None of the dialogue was in the script. It was ad-libbed completely. . . . A situation so rare that it almost never happens. . . . Not through a whole picture, anyway. . . . The Al Jolson's are carrying their youngster to Florida and the Kentucky derby. It's the first time he has accompanied them on a long trip. . . . That was Alex Morrison with Judith Barrett at La Conga. He's the brother of Patricia Morrison and formerly was a singer on the radio with Eddie Duchin's band. . . . Peggy Fears and Lupe Velez came within five minutes of meeting the other night at Neville Flessen's Mandala. Feud or no feud, they'd probably have rushed up and kissed, anyway.

The DOCTOR by MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

CHAPTER XLII

Chris belonged to clubs now, although he had little time for them. When he could steal an hour or two, he played golf, and after his late rounds at the hospital he joined the poker game downstairs. He was a member of the College of Surgeons, too, going to their meetings, listening intently to the Mayos, to Crile, to Cushman, to all the big men. The war had seen the final end of the isolation theory in surgery.

Once or twice, too, he went to a convention of the American Medical Association. Watching some of the older men there, he found them philosophical rather than eager, as if, having failed to rationalize the human race as to care of the body, they had finally recognized its supreme idiocy and lost hope. Yet he knew that most of them were still practical idealists, dedicated to what was at once a profession, an art, a science, and a career of service, often without hope of reward. What other profession labored so constantly to put itself out of business, he thought? Or paid so high a price? And this was the road he himself was to travel.

It was the next year that he took off Scott's arm at the shoulder. He had tried to save it, but the time had come when there was nothing more to be done. He sat by the bed until the anesthetic wore off, and Scott's first words were characteristic.

"Suppose I won't have to wear that damned sling any more, Chris?"

"No. No sling, Scott."

Now and then he saw Beverly, but it hurt him to see her, and he did not want to suffer any more. He was armored against that, too. But sometimes in the night he would realize that it had not been necessary; that none of it had been necessary; and remembering that lost letter of hers, he would fight an impulse to go into Katie's room and choke the truth out of her.

It was at that time, three years after his return from France, that Ted Lawrence, doing well by then in internal medicine, went to Katie about him.

"He can't go on like this, Katie," he said. "How long is it since he's had a vacation? Why don't you talk to him?"

"Talk to him!" she said. "Try it yourself. He wouldn't listen to me, anyhow."

"He'll break, as sure as God made little fishes."

But she was unconvinced. Chris was strong, and if he chose to put his work before anything else. She shrugged, and Ted inspected her, her short hair, her cigarette, her skirts revealing legs no longer slender.

"See here, Katie," he said. "Chris isn't happy. He isn't even comfortable. You know why, probably better than I can guess. But he's a decent chap. Why don't you make him happy? Why don't you make an effort to hold him? He's the faithful sort, if you give him a chance."

She laughed shortly. "Faithful! I don't believe it. What about the war? What about the hours he's shut in his office with all sort of women? They fall for him, you know. He's the sort to attract them. All women fall in love with their doctors more or less, don't they? You ought to know!"

"That sounds like Bob Barrett," Ted said grimly. "Chris is a one-woman man. Don't make a mistake about that."

"And I dare say I'm not the woman," said Katie calmly.

scandal, although Beverly still carried her head high and smiled her faint, wistful smile. Only recently Jerry had been picked up on the street and brought to the hospital by the police and had been later found by a nurse on a fire escape, about to leap into the air on invisible wings.

They had moved him into a room with barred windows after that. The hospital, going about its business past the door, could see Beverly there beside the bed. Sometimes she read to him. Sometimes she merely sat there quietly while he slept, like a woman beside her dead. But Ted knew that she would never leave Jerry. The war had left him to her, as definitely as if he had been maimed, and she would look after him.

She had plenty to think of. The panic was still on, and the settlement of her father's estate had left her with huge debts and an uncertain income. The mills had closed down, and she would have to leave the big house soon, and take a smaller one. But she told Jerry none of this, sitting there beside his bed and holding to his hand, and feeling more alone than she had ever known she could feel.

Now and then Chris passed along the corridor. She could hear him coming, the heavy firm walk, the lighter steps of a resident, the sound of their voices. But he seldom went into the room. After those first days she had ceased sending for him when Jerry disappeared. It was not fair to him, busy as he was; and she knew, too, that it was not fair to any of them. Their lives were fixed, settled for all time, and the only safe thing was to leave them so.

One day Chris learned through some medical underground that Jerry Ames had been committed to an institution in a distant city. He called Beverly at once, but she was out of town, and he knew what that meant.

He hung up the receiver with a sense of defeat. She was going through this alone, as she had gone through so much. She had built without him with a vengeance, he thought; and he went about his work half-heartedly for days.

Actually Jerry had committed himself. He had come through another bout to discover once again that in the dark he was no longer coordinate. The next day he called Beverly in and told her.

"I've no choice," he said, "and I can't make it myself. That's the fact. Besides—" he smiled at her ironically—"some day I might let go of a fire escape, and that would be a mistake."

She could hardly believe that he meant it, but he did. She helped him pack, and at his request she went with him. Then she settled herself at a small hotel in the neighborhood and prepared to wait. He had entered under an assumed name, and under that name she had registered.

It was a long waiting. She took her long walks into the country alone; swinging along, a still girlish figure in tweeds, glad of movement, glad to be tired at night so she could sleep. Once a week she was allowed to visit Jerry, but the visits were constrained and none too happy. He was nervous and irritable.

He had had no liquor since he entered, and she wondered whether that was safe. She was anxious. If he got desperate—She saw his eyes on her, and his ironic grin.

As time went on, however, he began to improve. The prolonged baths, the enforced exercise, had their effect. He even began to eat again. He was popular, and in a way contented. Now no longer did he have to make his own decisions, fight his own battles. The institution mothered him. "Better put on your sweater. It's cold today." He began to play, bridge on rainy days, tennis on better ones. Beverly, coming regularly on visiting days, began to feel that he did not want her there; that she reminded him of an outside world he wanted to forget for the time. Yet he was proud of her, of her beauty, her air of breeding.

"Come in, Sims. I want you to meet my wife."

But he was never sorry when the time came for her to leave. He would kiss her lightly and watch her go. She felt relieved during these months, almost happy. She was still hopeful when the time came for them to go home. And for two months he remained sober, going to the office and facing for the first time the financial chaos of the Lewis businesses. He would sit back in her father's study, and once again the wastebasket would be filled with scratch paper covered with figures.

"Of all the fool things to do, to build and endow a hospital!" he would say angrily. "And on this property. It ought to be yours. If we have to get out—" "We will have to, Jerry. We couldn't keep it up anyhow, could we?"

When the Board sent in the belated blueprints for the new hospital buildings, he threw them into the fire, and it was all she could do to save them. But he was not drinking. He went for two months without drinking. Then one night he did not come home, and Holmes could not find him at any of his usual haunts.

He was gone for three days. Then one morning at dawn he took a taxi to the new airport which he had helped to build, and walked not too steadily across the field. There was a mechanic there, and a plane warming up.

"All ready, I see, Manning," he said, and climbed in.

Manning was uncertain. He stood by his stained overalls, but Jerry was apparently cold sober and sure of himself. He grinned over the side of the cockpit.

"All right, let's go," he called, and Manning stepped forward. The plane rushed across the field and lifted; and once more Jerry felt the sweep and the rise, with the good earth below him and the better skies above. At first he loafed along. Then as the sun came up he began to scan the air for possible ambush. This was living; this was sport, adventure. He opened up the throttle. Now he was flying wide open. He was getting all the ship had. Out of sheer joy he rocked his wings, saluting some invisible foe. Suddenly he hit a down draft. A bump, by heck! Well, he'd show them! He brought up with a smack, grinning, and then fought his way up again. God, it was good to be up there! Let the Huns come!

He ducked deeper into the cockpit, away from the fury of the wind, and pulled up the nose of the plane. It climbed up and up. The sky above him was a brass bowl, and he was flying the rim of that bowl. He had no helmet, and the wind tore at his blond hair gleaming in the sun. Up and up to the rim of the world.

Now he was free. Those poor devils far below in the trenches, what could they know of this freedom? Down in the mud and dirt, with the guns booming and the rats crawling about them. For sheer joy in this new freedom he put the ship into a roll. Ah, this was flying—flying in! Jerry, for now he had no clouds in the air, and small clouds like angels.

He never knew that he had fallen.

Center shows a superb gown of smartly new design in traditional white. The bodice is of chiffon and lace, and long tight sleeves have lace insets from elbow to wrist. The little silver brocade cap bears tiny chiffon flowers. The maid-of-honor's dress, right, is in two shades of rose of chiffon-weight swiss transparent organdy in redingote effect. Redingote is embroidered and has long puffed sleeves.

Langhorne Squaws Open With Victory

LANGHORNE, May 2—Langhorne Squaws, champions of the Lower Bucks County scholastic softball league last year, successfully opened their campaign in defense of their laurels by whitewashing the New Hope outfit by a 10-0 count here yesterday afternoon.

Esther Gotwald, a three-year veteran of the mound staff, tossed them in for the Squaws, and, although touched for ten hits, she was tight in the pinches, pulling out of tough spots to retire the side with the bases full on no less than three occasions. In the fifth inning, Doris Primold, a newcomer for Langhorne, had an unassisted twin killing to retire the side with the sacks loaded.

The tilt was close until the fifth when the Squaws broke out with a 5 run rally to put the game on ice. Up to that time, they led by a 2-0 count. Helen Botke, first up in the 5th, laced out a home run to start things off, and before the side was retired, 11 batters went to the plate, 8 hit safely, and a quintet of tallies were pushed over the platter with 3 on when the final out was recorded. The Squaws added another trio of markers in the 6th to wind up the afternoon's scoring.

Bensalem Owlets Lose Initial Game

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, May 2—The Bensalem Owlets were not quite so fortunate in opening their 1939 season against the Newtown Bluebelles here yesterday afternoon for the invaders had two big innings in which they counted 5 times each to down the girls of Miss Helen Smith by a 13-8 score.

Bensalem was first to score when "Jo" Scoll counted in the second inning. Trailing 1-0 with two down in the fourth, the Bluebelles came to life and smashed out 6 hits to score five runs. The big blow of the frame was a home run by captain and pitcher, Dot Bond, with the bases full. Two more hits produced the fifth run before the side was retired.

The Owlets rallied themselves in the fifth and sixth with Hazel Lamon's home run with a runner on base in the third bringing the totals up to 8-7 with Newtown out in front. But in the 7th the Bluebelles came up with another quintet to settle the issue beyond recall, scoring them on 5 more hits. Loss of the tilt can be traced to the Owlets' failure to hit in the pinches, leaving the bases full at least twice.

Polish Press Urges Control of Danzig By A Protectorate

counter-claims in reply to Hitler's demands.

The call for Polish control of Danzig was sounded by influential sections of the press following the return of ambassador Josef Lipski to Warsaw from Berlin to confer with Foreign Minister Josef Beck.

Beck is scheduled to deliver an important statement to Parliament Friday, outlining Poland's reply to Hitler's Reichstag speech, in which the Fuehrer outlined his demands upon Poland and denounced the German-Polish non-aggression pact.

Beck is expected to voice his counter-proposals at that time. Already additional Polish army reservists are reported reinforcing the nation's frontier defenses in preparation for any emergency.

LONDON, May 2—(INS)—An assertion that British conscription would provide "more than 1,000,000 men for defense" in addition to other reserve and auxiliary units confronted Great Britain today with still another reminder of the seriousness and scope of its rearmament program.

The estimate of the man-power the draft would provide was made by Admiral Lord Chatfield, minister for co-ordination of defense, in a speech after the Government introduced in the House of Commons and made public two bills aimed at speeding the nation's preparations for any emergency.

Lord Chatfield said Great Britain has no wish to hamper German development, but declared:

"We are prepared to defend freedom of the seas to the last British sailor."

Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain introduced the conscription bill, calling some two-hundred thousand 20-year-olds to military service each year, to the House of Commons, where the measure passed the first of its three readings.

Later publication of the bill revealed that it provides heavy penalties for employers who fail to reinstate men to their former jobs after serving their six months military training.

Here and There In Bucks County Towns

It was at this point that Mr. Snyder made his comments regarding the promotion of 12-year-old children to the high school. After making the statement that he feels there should be more differentiated courses to meet the needs of the individual pupils, Mr. Snyder read an application from a Columbia University graduate. This person, said Mr. Snyder, holds degrees for excellent work in other schools. The applicant was said to have been very outstanding for work in English. The spelling in this application, said Mr. Snyder, was worse than inferior and the English was worse than "as she is spoken" by an illiterate person. "If such is a teacher's qualification, what may be expected of the pupils?" asked Mr. Snyder.

Superintendent Hoffman had arranged to have Assistant County Superintendent Albert C. Rutter, of Perkasie, comment upon the results in the spelling tests and Assistant County Superintendent Charles H. Boehm, Morrisville, to comment on the literary work.

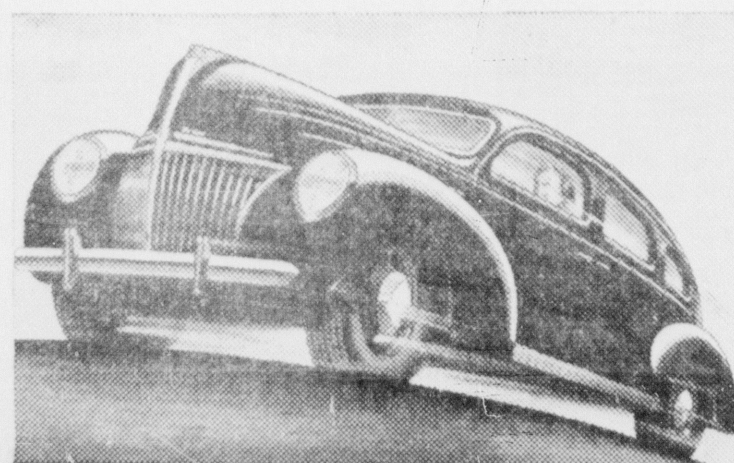

Mr. Rutter said he found that spelling is showing a vast improvement and so far this year there has been an outstanding improvement.

Mr. Boehm reported that during the past three years the literature papers showed tremendous improvement, especially in those districts where the directors supplied the pupils with the reading material as recommended by the county office.

Great interest was shown in the program and a large number of teachers and directors took part in the discussions.

Neither a chemical formula nor a doctor's degree, the above line has a perfectly clear meaning for the reader of classified advertisements.

"Furnished single room with private bath and kitchen."

All advertising is not written in this abbreviated form. On the contrary, we believe you'll find that most advertisers in this newspaper go out of their way to make their messages clear, concise, easy to read and understand.

For an advertisement, after all, is really a personal letter from some one who has something to sell to some one who wants to buy.

It is an advantage to the seller, that he can talk to you through the advertising columns of this newspaper. And it is an advantage to you, that you can study his proposition at your own leisure, weighing the merits of his product or service.

The next time you're "in the market" for any of the hundreds of things you buy during the year, make a point of shopping around through the advertisements before you start shopping around through the streets.

In the manner of the classified advertisement—"Yl. sv. tm. mny. get btr. rslts."
